Men Adrift in Separate Seas Experience Same Rescue How three poor fishermen help save a broken executive

Colorado Springs, Colo. – Three fishermen stranded at sea and a Hollywood executive drifting aimlessly in his life collide and find a common lifesaver in The Fourth Fisherman (WaterBrook Press, March 13, 2012). Author Joe Kissack tells the phenomenal entwining of the two stories. Fishermen from a Mexican village set out on a normal day to do their jobs, while Kissack reached the pinnacle of his career and appeared to be living the American dream.

What the men didn't see was a storm brewing on the sea for the fishermen, and another in the heart of Kissack. The fishermen's boat ends up adrift on the vast Pacific Ocean for nine months and 5,500 miles with their only source of hope a tattered Bible. Meantime, Kissack's life implodes, leaving a shattered, broken man struggling with addictions and alienated from his wife and two daughters. His lifeline also turns out to be a newfound faith, prompting a search to meet the rescued fishermen who helped change his life.

Kissack takes readers along on the bumpy journey of the true account of how four men in peril reach deep within themselves to survive nature and manmade hardships.
