Author Biography for Jeff Anderson

Author of

Plastic Donuts: Giving That Delights the Heart of the Father

Since childhood Jeff Anderson has displayed a unique blend of behaviors: he is both conservative yet aggressive, cautious but a risk-taker.

As a trained accountant fresh out of college, Jeff admits he found himself daydreaming about being a professional blackjack player. (Key word: “daydream”)

That explains how after a five-year career as a CPA with a big-six accounting firm, he left to become a full time stock day trader. For the next five years he spent his days staring at computer monitors, skipping bathroom breaks, and riding the roller coaster of market highs and lows.

Contrary to what these career shifts may suggest, there was something much deeper going on in his heart. For years Jeff reflected heavily on spiritual matters of giving, and of God’s perspective on our lives.

Through careful study of God’s Word, his growing passion in this area led to another radical career shift. In 2003, Jeff joined Crown Financial Ministries, eventually serving as vice president of generosity initiatives.

After many years there, he went on to establish Acceptable Gift.

Jeff simply has a gift for seeing "ordinary" scriptural truths in fresh new ways, and challenging people to expect more from their journey with God. He combines solid biblical research with application to our everyday lives.

He is an author, speaker, teacher, advisor to churches and non-profits and financial mentor to many.

Jeff is married to Stephanie and has four children: Austin, Cade, Gunnar and Autumn.
