Katie Ganshert

Author Katie Ganshert is a graduate of the University of Wisconsin in Madison with a degree in education. Before writing fulltime, she worked several years as a fifth grade teacher.

Born and raised in the Midwest, she resides with her husband, young son, and goofy black lab, Bubba, in Iowa.

Ganshert describes herself as a “slightly-frazzled, ever-inquisitive Midwest gal who’s passionate about Jesus, my family, adoption, writing, and all things romance, which is exactly what I write.”

She loves to write stories about flawed, broken characters, who wrestle with faith and fall in love.

“When I’m not plotting ways to get my hero and heroine to cross paths,” states Ganshert, “I enjoy being silly and laughing with my hunk of a husband, playing make-believe with my wild-child of a son, dreaming and planning for the day our Congolese daughter will come home, hanging out with the crazy but lovable junior high students at my church, and chatting with girlfriends over coffee.”

Ganshert is the author of the Carol Award winning and Christy nominated Wildflowers from Winter, Wishing on Willows and her newest novel A Broken Kind of Beautiful.

When she’s not busy writing or playing or reading or snuggling, Ganshert admits to obsessing over the paperwork and the waiting that comes with adoption, which she and her husband hope to complete sometime before they are fifty. For more, visit katieganshert.com.
